

River and Mercantile GLOBAL MACRO FUND

CLASS A USD (Accumulation)

PAST PERFORMANCE

The charts and tables below show the performance of the fund's USD (accumulation) share class since the fund's inception date of 28 February 2018. Source: River and Mercantile Investments Limited. Performance of the fund is calculated using published NAVs net of fees and expenses. This USD share class was launched 31 May 2018. Returns from 28 Feb 2018 to 31 May 2018 have been calculated from the actual GBP class B (Acc) share class returns. The methodology used was to increase the GBP by the US/UK interest rate differential using the 1-month LIBOR rates for both at the start of each month. Inception date taken as the date of seeding following a test-trade period after the fund's official launch on 25 Jan 2018. Past performance is not a reliable guide to future results.

MANAGER'S REVIEW

US equities returned their best monthly performance since November due to company earnings beating expectations and the continuation of rebounding economic data. The success of vaccination rollouts continues to deviate between nations, with the US and UK rolling out at pace. This is supporting a consumer led recovery in many developed markets, with the services sector in particular benefitting. Macro factors and positive trend aligned further as a result, leading the model to increase overall risk exposure.

The Federal Reserve is continuing to support credit markets through asset purchases and low rates, and sovereign yields have somewhat stabilised after they rose throughout the first quarter. As a result, economic and credit conditions improved to align further with motion. President Biden also outlined key policies during April, notably tax increases to fund further spending both in infrastructure and on the green transition to meet carbon reduction goals. Fiscal spending will likely be supportive for economic conditions for the foreseeable future, but we are yet to see what could pass the legislature and the methods of funding.
